DECLARATION OF ROBERT SPITZER

I, Dr. Robert Spitzer, declare under the penalty of perjury that the following is true and correct:

The Office of the Maine Attorney General has asked me to provide an expert opinion pertaining to firearms waiting periods and related restrictions in the United States in the above-captioned matter. This expert report and declaration (“Declaration”) provides that opinion and is based on my own personal knowledge and experience; if I am called as a witness, I could and would testify competently to the truth of the matters discussed in this Declaration.

BACKGROUND AND QUALIFICATIONS

1. I am a Distinguished Service Professor of Political Science Emeritus at the State University of New York at Cortland. I was also a visiting professor at Cornell University for thirty years. I am currently an adjunct professor at the College of William & Mary School of Law. I earned my Ph.D. in Government from Cornell University. I reside in Williamsburg, Virginia.

2. I am the author of 16 books on many American politics subjects, including six on gun policy. I have been studying and writing about gun policy for nearly forty years. My first publication on the subject appeared in 1985.¹ Since then, I have published six books and over one hundred articles, papers, and essays on gun policy. My expertise includes the history of gun laws, gun policy in American politics, and related historical, legal, political, and criminological issues. My book, The Politics of Gun Control, has been in print since its initial publication in 1995. It examines firearms policy in the United States through the lenses of history, law, politics, and criminology. The ninth edition of the book was recently published by Routledge Publishers (2024). My two most recent books on gun policy, Guns across America (Oxford University Press, 2015, 2017) and The Gun Dilemma (Oxford University Press, 2023), both deal extensively with the study of historical gun laws, a subject I have been studying and writing on for over ten years. I am frequently interviewed and quoted in the national and international media on gun-related matters. For nearly thirty years, I have been a member of the National Rifle Association and of Brady (formerly, the Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence).

3. I have provided written testimony as an expert witness in the following cases (in addition to this case): Worman v. Healey, No. 1:17-10107-WGY (D. Mass.); Hanson v. District of Columbia, No. 1:22-cv-02256 (D.D.C.); Brumback v. Ferguson, No. 22-cv-3093 (E.D. Wash.); Sullivan v. Ferguson, No. 3:22-cv-05403 (W.D. Wash.); *Miller v. RETENTION AND COMPENSATION

7. I have been retained by the Office of the Attorney General of Maine to render expert opinions in this case. I am being compensated at a rate of $500 per hour for record review and consultation, document preparation, and other non-testimony services, and $750 per hour for deposition and trial testimony. My compensation is not contingent on the results of my expert analysis or the substance of my opinions or testimony in this matter.

OPINIONS

I. GUN PURCHASE WAITING PERIODS

8. Gun purchase waiting periods and related background checks as they are understood and implemented today did not exist early in the country's history. Yet no special wisdom is required to discern why. Three important differences between early America and the modern era explain why.

9. First, in the modern era, gun and ammunition purchases can be made easily and rapidly from tens of thousands of licensed gun dealers,² private sales, gun shows, and through internet sales. This modern sales system was key to the enactment of waiting periods. No "Guns-R-Us" outlets existed in the 1600s, 1700s, or most of the 1800s. In the eighteenth century and before, the vast majority of firearms available in American were European imports. Among American gunsmiths, according to early American historian Brian DeLay, most American gunsmith work consisted of repair work, not the construction of firearms from scratch.

² As of 2022, there were nearly 78,000 licensed gun dealers. "Gun Dealers in the United States," Everytown for Gun Safety, <https://everytownresearch.org/wp-content/uploads/sites/4/2021/05/Inside-the-Gun-Shop-One-Pager.pdf>

Moreover, for the few that did manufacture firearms from start to finish, “it would have taken an early American gunsmith around a week of work to produce a basic, utilitarian longarm from scratch.”³ According to DeLay, “repairs consumed the vast majority of [their] work. . . .”⁴

10. Rapid, convenient gun sales processes did not exist in the U.S. until the end of the nineteenth century, when mass production techniques, improved technology and materials, and escalating marketing campaigns all made guns relatively cheap, prolific, reliable, and easy to get. As Kennett and Anderson note, “By the 1880s gunmaking had completed the transition from craft to industry.”⁵ The rise of handgun mail order purchasing through such companies as Montgomery Ward and Sears in the 1870s and 1880s brought cheap handguns to buyers’ doors.⁶ When the adverse consequences of the spread of cheap handguns began to be felt, states enacted numerous anti-gun carry and other restrictions in the late 1800s and early 1900s.⁷

11. Second, no organized system of gun waiting periods and background checking could feasibly exist until the modern era. In fact, the contemporary uniform federal background check system with a five business day waiting period was established by the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act in 1993. The waiting period was phased out in 1998 and replaced with an instant background check system. No such system was operational when the law was passed, but bill supporters accepted the waiting period phase-out as part of the compromise to win passage of the bill.⁸ As of this writing, 13 states plus D.C. have waiting period laws for at least some firearm purchases ranging in length from three to 30 days.⁹ By its nature, a gun waiting period simply delays an otherwise lawful purchase for two sound reasons: to complete a proper background check to insure that the individual is not among those not qualified to have a gun; and to provide a cooling off period for those who seek to obtain a gun impulsively for homicidal or suicidal reasons.¹⁰

12. Third, as historian Randall Roth reports, homicide rates in the colonies and early Federal era were generally low, and when homicides occurred, guns were seldom used because of the time involved loading them, their unreliability, and (especially for pistols) their inaccuracy. More specifically, muzzle loading firearms were problematic as implements for murder: they did not lend themselves to impulsive use unless already loaded (and it was generally unwise to leave them loaded for extended periods because their firing reliability degraded over time). Nearly all firearms at the time were single shot weapons, meaning that reloading time rendered them all but useless if a second shot was needed in an interpersonal conflict.¹¹

13. Beyond these considerations, waiting periods can only exist through the interdiction of the government, or dealers, or both. Given the logical absence of historical twins to modern waiting periods in earlier American history, were there similar, analogous historical gun laws? A close examination of historical laws, ordinances, and regulations shows a long history in this country of (1) temporarily restricting or regulating weapons access based on assumptions about risks posed by an individual's perceived mental condition with respect to alcohol intoxication, and (2) enacting and enforcing licensing/permitting laws, which by their nature incorporated the passage of time between the attempt by individuals to acquire or use weapons and the granting of permission by the government to then do so. The Plaintiffs' Complaint in this case asserts that "[t]here is no longstanding tradition in this country of forcing law-abiding citizens to wait to acquire firearms."¹² The account below will demonstrate that this assertion is incorrect.

II. GUNS AND INTOXICATION

14. An instructive and analogous historical parallel to modern waiting period laws is the intersection of historic gun laws pertaining to alcohol use and intoxication with weapons possession and use. Just as those considered mentally ill are similarly understood to reflect a kind of "diminished capacity" such that they also may be deprived of access to weapons, alcohol intoxication was a basis for preventing gun acquisition or use because it diminished capacity, judgment, and reason. The effects of alcohol consumption in reducing and degrading an individual's judgment, reasoning, coordination, and skill were well understood in early America.

15. For example, the foremost American physician of the eighteenth century, Dr. Benjamin Rush, published a highly influential and widely read tract in 1785 titled, An Inquiry into the Effects of Ardent Spirits Upon the Human Body and Mind. (The phrase “ardent spirits” referred to strong distilled liquors.) In addition to his pioneering work in medicine, Rush was a signer of the Declaration of Independence, advisor to public officials including Thomas Jefferson, and a social activist. After first noting in his tract the physiological effects of inebriation and alcoholism, Rush then turned to its mental effects. “Not less destructive are the effects of ardent spirits upon the human mind. They impair the memory, debilitate the understanding, and pervert the moral faculties. . . . But the demoralizing effects of distilled spirits do not stop here. They produce not only falsehood, but fraud, theft, uncleanness and murder.”¹³

16. It is no crime to be intoxicated from alcohol consumption—a fact no less true today than hundreds of years ago. Similarly, the purchase of alcohol for those eligible to drink is and has been perfectly legal, with the exception of the Prohibition period in the 1920s. When alcohol consumption is combined with other activities or circumstances, however, it has been and is subject to a variety of regulatory measures, including state sanctions, such as those arising from operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol. When inebriation ends, drivers may resume driving, subject to any restrictions imposed by the government for prior instances of driving while drunk, such as license suspension for a fixed period.

¹³ Benjamin Rush, An Inquiry into the Effects of Ardent Spirits Upon the Human Body and Mind, 6th ed. (NY: Cornelius Davis, 1811; first pub. 1785), 7, <https://digirepo.nlm.nih.gov/ext/mhl/2569025R/PDF/2569025R.pdf>

17. That aside, the government has long imposed a wide range of regulatory measures pertaining to the adverse consequences of alcohol consumption (including but not limited to those pertaining to weapons), incorporating “pricing and taxation measures, regulating the physical availability of alcohol, restricting alcohol marketing, education and persuasion strategies, drunk-driving countermeasures, modifying the drinking context, and treatment and early intervention.”¹⁴

18. In the century and a half before the American Revolution, “the colonists of North America tended to regard heavy drinking as normal”¹⁵ as such beverages “were considered important and invigorating foods, whose restorative powers were a natural blessing.”¹⁶ Reliance on alcoholic beverages was also common because of the baneful health effects of drinking contaminated water. Despite the normality of heavy drinking, drunkenness was also recognized even in this early period as a significant problem to be “condemned and punished”¹⁷ partly for the reasons described by Benjamin Rush. Early weapons laws (see below) reflected this understanding. During this period, the adverse consequences of excessive drinking were mitigated to a significant degree because it largely occurred through community taverns where social pressures and a system of tavern licensing, dating to the 1600s, encouraged “responsible oversight”¹⁸ by tavern owners.

19. The post-Revolution period, however, witnessed a dramatic change in alcohol products as cheaper and more abundant distilled spirits, like domestic whiskey, exploded in production and demand. As production and consumption skyrocketed, earlier safeguards declined, and public drunkenness became much more common.¹⁹ Coinciding with these changes, attitudes began to change as well, as alcohol came to be thought of increasingly as “an addicting and even poisonous drug,” the excessive consumption of which led to a host of familial, behavioral, social, and other problems.²⁰ This growing societal awareness of the adverse consequences of alcohol consumption gave rise to the temperance movement and the Anti-Saloon Leagues of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, culminating in the adoption of the Eighteenth (Prohibition) Amendment to the Constitution in 1919, which was then repealed by the Twenty-first Amendment in 1933.

20. Even though attitudes about alcohol use evolved over time, laws restricting or punishing the handling, carrying, or use of firearms while intoxicated appeared among the very earliest weapons regulations in America. From the 1600s through the early 1900s, laws were enacted in at least 30 states that regulated, restricted, and punished inebriation in connection with the ownership or use of weapons. These regulations included laws enacted in at least 20 states that criminalized the carrying or use of firearms when intoxicated. At least 15 states had laws that regulated the commercial sale or distribution of alcohol when firearms were also present; at least two states barred gun sales to those who were intoxicated; at least six states enacted laws prohibiting drunkenness in connection with militia activity; and one state (Arizona) barred providing guns to Native Americans if intoxicated (see Exhibits B and C).

21. To parse the data chronologically, in the 1600s, at least seven intoxication laws were enacted in at least three states (which at the time were colonies); in the 1700s at least nine laws were enacted in seven colonies/states; in the 1800s at least 28 laws were enacted in 19 states ; and in the 1900s at least 32 laws were enacted in 15 states (note that some states enacted laws across more than one century). As noted, a number of these measures appeared very early in the Nation’s history, punctuating the country’s enduring struggle with “demon rum.”

22. In 1623, 1631, and again in 1632, for example, Virginia enacted measures all directing that “[n]o commander of any plantation, shall either himself or suffer others to spend powder unnecessarily, that is to say, in drinking or entertainments.”²¹ One presumes that the expenditure of powder pertained both to firearms discharges and perhaps to the separate ignition of gun powder. Most important, however, is that the actions under regulation were barred specifically when “drinking” was involved. In a 1655 Virginia law, alcohol-fueled revelry was subject to fines for any who would “shoot any guns at drinking,” although the law carved out two special occasions for regulatory exemption: “marriages and funerals only excepted.”²² While this admittedly amusing law was prompted by concern over whether colonists would hear an alarm warning of a Native American attack, the law’s enactment was necessitated by rowdy “frequent shooting of guns at drinking” which the law dubbed “beastly vice spending much powder in vaine” that could otherwise be used in fending off an attack or for other purposes. Thus, the law applied only to the intersection of shooting and drinking, not all shooting, recognizing yet again the early understanding that alcohol-fueled firearms use led to undesirable (and therefore prohibitory) behavior.

23. In 1636 Rhode Island enacted a measure to punish any who would engage in “shooting out any gun . . . drinking in any tavern alehouse . . . on the first day of the week more than necessity requireth.” Any who did so would find themselves in the stocks or fined five shillings.²³ In 1663 Massachusetts criminalized any on board of ships docked at any colonial harbor where those on board would “be drunk within their vessels by day or night” and “shoot off any gun after the daylight is past, or on the sabbath day.” The fine was a substantial twenty shillings for every gun so fired.²⁴ In 1750 Pennsylvania enacted a law “For Suppressing Idleness, Drunkenness, And Other Debaucheries” that punished with “penalties and forfeitures” any who fired guns or set off fireworks without a special license to do so.²⁵

24. Such measures proliferated in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, most commonly as a bar to weapons carrying or discharging. For example, the Tennessee legislature granted a locality the authority to penalize “shooting and carrying guns” along with drinking in 1825.²⁶ In 1868, Kansas enacted a law to punish anyone found to carry a deadly weapon while “under the influence of intoxicating drink.”²⁷ Nevada enacted measures in 1881 and 1885 that punished anyone who discharged firearms in various public spaces while “under the influence of liquor.”²⁸ An 1883 Wisconsin law made it “unlawful for any person in a state of intoxication, to go armed with any pistol or revolver.”²⁹ In 1878, 1880, and 1908, Mississippi enacted laws that made it illegal “to sell to any minor or person intoxicated” any pistol or other named weapon³⁰ (minors and those intoxicated were more than occasionally treated together within these laws, a clear indication of their inferior legal status³¹). In 1907, Arizona enacted a law making it “unlawful for any constable or other peace officer in the Territory of Arizona, while under the influence of intoxicating liquor of any kind, to carry or have on his person a pistol, gun, or other firearm.”³²

26. A Maryland state law from 1884 pertaining to Baltimore stated that anyone found to be “drunk or disorderly” who was also carrying a concealed pistol or other weapon was subject to confiscation of the weapon and a fine.³⁴ Rhode Island enacted a similar law—fine plus weapon confiscation—in 1893.³⁵ An 1899 South Carolina law said that “any person who shall engage in any boisterous conduct, under the influence of intoxicating liquors” who discharged a firearm of any kind near a road would be subject to a fine and jail.³⁶ A 1909 Idaho law criminalized anyone who “shall have or carry any such weapon upon or about his person when intoxicated, or under the influence of intoxicating drinks.”³⁷

27. While the focus of these laws was on regulating persons who had weapons while drinking or drunk, another category of laws in early America restricted the sale or distribution of alcohol in the proximity of persons with firearms. A 1679 Massachusetts law prohibited bringing or selling “any wine, strong liquor, cider, or any other inebriating drinckes, excepting beere of a

It also punished any attempting to sell “any strong liquor” in a booth or tent in proximity of a militia training area.⁴⁰ Also in 1756, Maryland enacted a similar measure to penalize attempts to sell “strong liquor” at the time and location of militia musters.⁴¹ Pennsylvania enacted the same type of measure in 1780.⁴² Such measures extended into the nineteenth century.⁴³ These laws make abundantly clear that diminished capacity caused by alcohol consumption when gun carrying and use was also occurring was serious enough to proscribe the intersection of the two by law.

28. Aside from these laws restricting the civilian commercial sale of alcohol, colonies and then states also enacted laws that directly restricted or punished drunkenness among militia ranks⁴⁴ for the obvious reason that excessive alcohol consumption undermined military order, morale, and effectiveness.⁴⁵ To be sure, alcohol was also very much a part of soldiering during this time. For example, General George Washington “insisted on alcohol for his men”⁴⁶ during the Revolutionary War, but like any good commander, he wanted to tightly control its dissemination and consumption. The normal daily alcohol ration for Washington’s men was four ounces.⁴⁷

29. States and localities enacted similar laws in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. A Chicago, Illinois ordinance from 1851 imposed a series of strict and wide-ranging regulations concerning licensing for the storage, transport, and handling of gun powder and gun cotton that included this prohibition: “no permit shall be granted to any retailer of intoxicating liquors or to any intemperate person.”⁴⁸ St. Paul, Minnesota enacted a similar measure in 1858.⁴⁹ Delaware enacted laws in 1911 and 1919 that made it “unlawful for any person or persons, or a member of any firm, or the agents or officers of any corporation to sell to a minor, or any intoxicated person, any revolver, pistol, or revolver or pistol cartridges.”⁵⁰

30. The whole point of these laws—to keep firearms from the hands of the intoxicated while they were in a state of intoxication—provides a remarkable parallel to the “cooling off” purpose of modern waiting period laws. The intoxicated could generally acquire or reacquire guns after they sobered up, just as in the modern era gun license applicants can acquire their guns after the “cooling off” period.

31. Thus, “sobering up” might be thought of as the historical equivalent of “cooling off.”

III. HISTORICAL WEAPONS LICENSING LAWS

32. Weapons licensing or permitting was a widespread and varied regulatory tool utilized in America. By one definition, licensing is the “permission by competent authority to do an act which, without such permission, would be illegal. . . .”⁵¹ Despite the difference of hundreds of years, licensing in early America functioned largely in the way it functions today.

33. While different in its particulars, historical weapons licensing and permitting laws did, and do, operate in a manner similar to modern waiting periods, in that they are predicated on a process whereby a license applicant provides or submits some kind of information which is then evaluated and judged to be acceptable or not. If the judgment is affirmative, the license is granted. By its nature, then, licensing contemplates the passage of some period of time (even if it be brief) between the time the application for permission to do something is submitted (such as a hunting license application) and the license or permission is granted. In addition, licensing generally represented a more mature and nuanced form of regulation that in many instances succeeded or supplemented more rigid but less complicated laws (see discussion below). The same might be said of modern waiting periods, in that they are a more nuanced and sophisticated policy tool to winnow out those who might pose a threat with possession of a firearm. In addition, licensing by its nature thwarts any unrestricted ability to acquire or use firearms on demand.

34. Colonial, state, and local laws encompassing the licensing or permitting of dangerous weapons and substances date to the 1600s and 1700s, but became more wide-ranging and widespread in the 1800s and early 1900s. These laws mostly pertained to those weapons and substances that posed a threat to public safety: concealable weapons, including handguns, fighting knives, various types of clubs, and explosives (ranging from firecrackers and gunpowder to nitroglycerine after its invention). This is consistent with what became the widespread use of licensing by the nineteenth century, which was employed “to regulate and control a host of economic activities, trades, callings, and professions” though “the overall justification for licensing was the same as the police power generally—the public good and the people’s welfare.”⁵²

35. At least 89 licensing requirement laws were enacted in at least 34 states for individuals as a pre-requisite for their weapons carrying or ownership during this time (including Maine⁵³); laws in 18 states did so in the 1800s and 29 did so in the 1900s (some states enacted laws in multiple centuries; see Exhibits D and E). Laws in at least 27 states regulated firearms discharging through licensing, with 13 of those states doing so from the 1700s up to the start of the Civil War, and another 20 states doing so between the end of the Civil War and 1900 (some states enacted laws in both periods). Laws in at least 12 states licensed hunting with firearms from the 1800s through the early 1900s. At least 20 states had laws that licensed the commercial sale, transport, or firing of weapons at locations like shooting galleries from the 1600s through the early 1900s. Laws in at least 22 states licensed the possession, handling, or transport of gunpowder and other explosives from the 1600s through the early 1900s. Laws in at least 17 states required those selling or otherwise providing weapons to individuals to record and keep information pertaining to the buyers of weapons in the late 1800s and the early 1900s as the sales process matured and became regulated.

36. In addition, at least 15 states imposed licensing requirements on specified marginalized groups (variously including Native Americans, non-citizens, non-state residents, or minors). In the pre-Civil War period, at least 13 states allowed for licensing of enslaved persons or free Blacks. And nine states enacted regulatory taxes on firearms.

37. A great many laws pertaining to weapons carrying, discharge, commercial sales, and gunpowder licensing generally were first enacted in or for municipalities (populated areas), since the misuse of weapons posed a far greater and more identifiable risk to public safety in areas where larger numbers of people lived in close proximity to each other, and because observing, monitoring, and enforcing these measures by local governments was more feasible in jurisdictions where larger numbers of people lived in more geographically defined and confined areas. Municipal laws are no less significant than state laws for three reasons: first, social and public safety problems arising from weapons typically appeared first in places where large numbers of people congregated and lived—i.e., cities and towns. These problems multiplied in the nineteenth century as the U.S. began to transition from an overwhelmingly rural nation to a majority urban one. Second, given that municipalities are legal creatures of state governments, localities' ability to enact these or other laws presumes that they did so as allowable public policy under state law. Third, the initial enactment of municipal regulations often led to subsequent enactment of similar state-wide regulations.

38. These licensing categories were generally instances where the prevailing legal standard had been to criminalize the activity or practice outright—criminalizing concealed carrying, banning weapons discharge in cities and towns, banning weapons from marginalized groups, etc. The governing units enacting licensing for these activities were now allowing firearms or other dangerous weapons or substances to be used or possessed with the granting of a license to do so, when their possession or use would otherwise be subject to criminal penalties. The proliferation of licensing represented in most instances a new and more mature form of government regulation of the activities in question.

39. With regard to concealed carry of pistols and other dangerous weapons, for example, from the 1700s through the early 1900s every state in the country restricted or criminalized such carrying.⁵⁴ With the spread of licensing requirements in the post-Civil War nineteenth century, however, governing units were now allowing legal weapons carrying, subject to the review criteria as conducted by local officials who were empowered to grant carry licenses. The criteria for the granting of these licenses were generally highly discretionary for the individuals or bodies granting them. In some laws, no criteria were specified; in others, the criteria were vague or broad, but often included wording that the applicants must be persons of good character or sound judgment, again emphasizing the determinative judgment of those granting the licenses. They usually set a time limit for permits, ranging from a month to a year (see below).

40. Regarding hunting licenses, many earlier laws criminalized various hunting practices, dating back to the 1600s, for reasons related to protection of private property and lands, conservation, and safety.⁵⁵ The hunting related laws listed here are all instances where hunting was allowed through permitting by a governing entity, meaning that the permits or licenses could be withdrawn if the licensees violated whatever rules the laws imposed (such as hunting out of season). Licensing related to Indigenous people, enslaved persons, and free persons of color is examined in more detail below.

A. Licensing of Weapons Carrying or Possession

⁵⁵ Spitzer, “Gun Law History in the United States and Second Amendment Rights,” 73-74.

41. This analysis identified 89 concealed weapons carry license laws enacted by 34 states from the post-Civil War period through the early 1900s: 35 of these laws were enacted by 18 states between the end of the Civil War and 1900, and 53 were enacted by 29 states in the early 1900s (some states enacted laws in both centuries). Generally speaking, these laws criminalized the concealed carrying of various weapons, but all of the laws examined here carved out exceptions for those who applied for, and received, a carry license. In addition, most permit laws imposed a time limit on permit duration, generally ranging from a month to a year, regardless of other criteria.

42. Broadly speaking, these laws fell into two categories: those that specified criteria for granting a license, and those that did not: 54 of the 89 laws included discretionary criteria for the issuing of licenses, whereas the other 35 did not. Thus, about 60% of these licensing laws included discretionary criteria. Of the latter (no discretionary criteria listed) category, it is possible that criteria were specified in other laws, documents, oaths, or the like, but that were not specified in the laws enacting a weapons licensing scheme.

43. In 1871, Missouri enacted a measure to license the otherwise illegal practice of concealed carrying of handguns and other named weapons, including “any other dangerous or deadly weapon” in St. Louis by means of “written permission from the Mayor.”⁵⁶ St. Louis enacted its own municipal version of this law in 1892.⁵⁷ A similar measure was enacted for

Kansas City, Missouri, in 1880.⁵⁸ Jersey City, New Jersey enacted a licensing scheme in 1871 for concealed weapons carrying of pistols and other dangerous weapons, defined in the law as “any gun, pistol, cannon, or fowling piece or other fire-arms. . . .”⁵⁹ As this wording makes clear, this extended to long guns as well (a fowling piece is a long-barreled shotgun for shooting small animals⁶⁰). Jersey City’s 1873 law laid out a broadly discretionary set of criteria for granting licenses, described below (as determined by the city’s municipal court), that bears great similarity to contemporary gun licensing schemes:

The Municipal Court of Jersey City may grant permits to carry any of the weapons named in the first section to such persons as should, from the nature of their profession, business or occupation, or from peculiar circumstances, be allowed so to do; and may, in granting such permits, impose such conditions and restrictions in each case as to the court shall seem proper.⁶¹

44. The Jersey City ordinance added that carry permits would not be granted “to any person until the court is satisfied that such person is temperate, of adult age, and capable of exercising self-control.”⁶²

45. Hyde Park, Illinois enacted a similar licensing law for concealed weapons carrying, including handguns, in 1876. In this instance, the licenses were granted “by written

46. New York City criminalized the carrying of “a pistol of any description concealed on his person” in 1881 but provided for a legal carry license exception:

Any person, except as provided in this article, who has occasion to carry a pistol for his protection, may apply to the officer in command at the station-house of the precinct where he resided, and such officer, if satisfied that the applicant is a proper and law abiding person, shall give said person a recommendation to the superintendent of police, or the inspector in command at the central office in the absence of the superintendent, who shall issue a permit to the said person allowing him to carry a pistol of any description.⁶⁵

47. This provision also allowed for non-residents who had occasional business in the city to apply for permits as well. An 1884 New York state law barred the carrying or possession of named weapons, including fighting knives and types of clubs, from those under eighteen, unless they possessed a license to do so. Licenses could only be granted for up to one year and were subject to revocation “at the pleasure of the mayor.”⁶⁶ A year later, the law was extended to

Wheeling, West Virginia enacted a law in 1881 making it “unlawful for any person to carry” various named weapons, including a “colt” revolver, or to “carry about his person, hid from common observation” any pistol or other named weapon without a permit from the mayor.⁶⁹ Under the heading “License,” an 1882 law applying to St. Paul, Minnesota criminalized any concealed weapons carrying, absent such licensing.⁷⁰

50. A law passed by the U.S. Congress in 1892 for the District of Columbia criminalized the concealed carry of “any deadly or dangerous weapons,” including pistols, unless granted a permit by a judge of the police court “for a period of not more than one month at any one time, upon satisfactory proof to him of the necessity for the granting thereof. . . .”⁷⁶ Florida’s 1893 law made it “unlawful to carry or own a Winchester or other repeating rifle or without first taking out a license from the County Commissioner. . . .” In addition, the law specified that the applicant “shall give a bond running to the Governor of the State in the sum of one hundred dollars, conditioned on the proper and legitimate use of the gun with sureties to be approved by the County Commissioners,” along with “a record of the name of the person taking out such license, the name of the maker of the firearm so licensed to be carried and the caliber and number of the same.”⁷⁷

52. A state law in Nebraska granted the mayor of Lincoln the authority to issue concealed carry weapons licenses good for a year “to so many and such persons as he may think proper” in 1895, adding that the mayor “may revoke any and all of such licenses at his pleasure.”⁷⁹ The city of Spokane, Washington criminalized the concealed carrying of “either a revolver, pistol or other fire-arms” unless persons obtained a “special written permit from the Superior Court” to do so.⁸⁰ Milwaukee, Wisconsin enacted a permitting system in 1896 for persons to carry otherwise barred various dangerous weapons including “any pistol or colt” if the city police chief granted a license if “it is necessary for the personal safety of such person or for the safety of his property or of the property with which he may be entrusted, to carry such weapon.” The chief could also “revoke such permit at any time.”⁸¹

53. In the twentieth century, permitting accelerated, spread, and broadened. In 1905 New Jersey enacted a state law licensing concealed weapons carrying for a year “unless sooner revoked by the officer or body granting the same.”⁸² Licensing was extended to long guns—machine guns and automatic rifles—in New Jersey in 1927⁸³ and 1934.⁸⁴ (A number of the 36 states that enacted anti-machine gun laws in the 1920s and 1930s made exceptions for possession via licensing.) In 1906 a Massachusetts state law noted that prosecution for carrying “a loaded pistol or revolver” did not apply to those with a license.⁸⁵ It extended licensing to a variety of guns in 1927.⁸⁶ In 1908 Virginia enacted a dangerous weapons concealed carry permit law, with permits granted for one year “upon a written application and satisfactory proof of the good character and necessity of the applicant to carry concealed weapon.”⁸⁷ It extended the permitting process in 1926.⁸⁸

54. In 1909, Portland, Maine enacted a discretionary weapons concealed carry law applying to the carrying of any “fire arm, slung shot, knuckles, bowie knife, dirk, stiletto, or other dangerous or deadly weapon” unless licensed to do so by the local police. It could issue licenses to any person of good moral character, whose business or occupation requires the carrying of such weapons for protection, a certificate setting forth that such person has complied with the requirements of this ordinance, and that he has been duly licensed to carry such weapon or weapons for protection. pistols [was] either prohibited absolutely or permitted only with a license in every state but two.”¹⁰²

56. The existence and functioning of old licensing laws make clear that the government could take whatever time was needed to complete the licensing process, consistent with its police powers. The historical realities of licensing provide no notion nor inclination that there was anything resembling a “right” to obtain or use firearms on demand. Moreover, no license law examined here imposed any time limit by which a license application had to be approved or denied by the relevant governing authority. And often, these laws gave the individual or body that granted the license to also withdraw or cancel it at his or its pleasure. If one trait of these laws emerges, it is that those granting licenses had wide-ranging discretion to issue or not issue as they saw fit, and to do so according to any time frame they saw fit.

B. Permits for Firearms Discharge or Use of Explosives

57. As noted above, laws in at least 27 states established licensing mechanisms to allow firearms and like discharges under certain circumstances. Generally speaking, firearms and discharge licensing pertained to any firearm, not just handguns. From the 1700s to 1860, laws in at least 13 colonies/states assigned discharge licensing authority to local officials. The earliest were in Pennsylvania. In 1713, Philadelphia penalized various activities in the city including “firing a Gun without license.”¹⁰³ An act pertaining to the entire colony from 1721 imposed “penalties and forfeitures” to anyone who engaged in various activities including firing “any gun or other fire arm” or selling or setting off various types of fireworks “without the governor’s special license.”¹⁰⁴ Another Philadelphia ordinance to prevent “mischief [that] may happen by shooting of guns” or setting off fireworks, criminalized such activities unless individuals first obtained a “governor’s special license.”¹⁰⁵ A 1750 law did the same for the District of Southwark,¹⁰⁶ as did a colony-wide law also in 1750.¹⁰⁷ In 1824, permission from the president of the board of commissioners was required for anyone seeking to test through firing any gun, cannon, or similar weapons in certain sections of Philadelphia.¹⁰⁸

58. Charleston, South Carolina enacted an ordinance in 1802 similar to those of Philadelphia where Commissioners of the Streets would grant a license for gun firing and fireworks “at times of public rejoicing” and at specified locations.¹⁰⁹ New Hampshire enacted a discharge permit system for Portsmouth in 1823.¹¹⁰ New York State enacted a law in 1824 that allowed the Schenectady mayor or other city officials to grant permission for discharge of any gun or various fireworks.¹¹¹ Marietta, Ohio enacted a discharge licensing law in 1823 because of concern that “the quiet of any of the inhabitants may be disturbed, or their lives and safety endangered.”¹¹² New London, Connecticut singled out “some public day of review” in an 1835 law as a permissible reason for issuing a discharge permit,¹¹³ and New Haven enacted a similar law in 1845.¹¹⁴ The same was enacted for Quincy, Illinois in 1841,¹¹⁵ Jeffersonville, Indiana in 1855,¹¹⁶ and Richmond, Virginia in 1859.¹¹⁷ Such laws were enacted in another 21 states from the end of the Civil War up to the end of the 1800s (not including laws in states enacted both before and after the Civil War: dealers in firearms, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Louisiana, Maine, New Jersey, Oregon, Texas, Vermont, Washington State, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming). Most of them applied to specified cities and towns within their states.

59. Many early laws criminalized various hunting practices, dating back to the 1600s, for reasons related to protection of private property and lands, conservation, and safety.¹¹⁸ The states with hunting-related laws listed here all allowed hunting as permitted or authorized by or through a government entity or policy, meaning that the permits or licenses could be withdrawn if the licensees violated whatever rules the laws imposed (such as hunting out of season, or hunting certain types of game). Hunting licensing or permission laws were enacted in at least 12 states from the 1700s through the early 1900s. Two colonies, New Jersey and New York, enacted laws in the 1700s. The rest spanned the 1800s to the early 1900s.

D. Commercial Licensing Laws

60. As noted, commercial licensing laws were enacted in a total of at least 20 states, enacted with 15 states doing so throughout the 1800s, and 9 states doing so in the early 1900s (laws were enacted in some states in both centuries).

61. A remarkably early, if limited, commercial licensing law was enacted by the Connecticut colony in 1642. The law barred the sale or barter of weapons to Indigenous people as well as “to any person inhabiting out of this Jurisdiction” but excepted people who first obtained a license to engage in such transactions from “the particular Court” or “two magistrates”¹¹⁹ to do so. Strictly speaking, this statute was aimed at any individual who might contemplate such trade, but the focus was on regulating commercial activity, to the extent feasible, in the mid-seventeenth century. (The law did not specify the conditions or circumstances under which such a license might be granted.)

62. An 1814 Illinois measure that made it unlawful for whites to engage in commercial activities with Native Americans for guns, knives, tomahawks, or other items, unless they first obtained a license from the governor.¹²⁰ A century later a Chicago ordinance imposed a licensing requirement both on persons or entities to sell concealable weapons, and also a licensing requirement to those seeking to buy them.¹²¹ An 1854 law for San Francisco, California licensed commercial shooting galleries.¹²² Indeed, at least 10 of the states in this category enacted shooting gallery licensing requirements, such as an ordinance for Martinsburg, West Virginia in 1876 that required a license issued by the mayor for the opening and maintenance of a pistol gallery.¹²³ This historical category of law is consistent with the notion that the government could and can regulate the commercial activity of selling and commercially using weapons.

E. Licensing Restrictions on Gunpowder

63. Gunpowder was widely and extensively regulated in the colonies and states. In fact, every state in the country but one enacted one or more gunpowder laws from the seventeenth century through the start of the twentieth century.¹²⁴ One element of this regulation was gunpowder licensing; with such licensing laws enacted in at least 22 states from the 1700s through the early 1900s. This pertained directly to the operation of firearms, as gunpowder was indispensable to firearm discharge for most guns through the post-Civil War period.

F. Weapons Sellers Recording Purchases

64. Aside from direct licensing of weapons purchasers by a government official or entity, at least 17 states had laws that required those who sold or otherwise transferred guns (mostly handguns) or other weapons to others to record information about the buyer, with that information to be maintained and subject to possible later examination. This regulatory mechanism put the burden of information collection and maintenance on the seller or dealer, rather than directly on the government, though it served the same purpose: to acquire and maintain information about those who obtained the weapons in question and when, for future reference or inspection by government officials or others. In some instances these requirements existed along with direct governmental licensing.

In 1885, Illinois enacted this registration requirement for weapons dealers:

All persons dealing in deadly weapons, hereinbefore mentioned, at retail within this State shall keep a register of all such weapons sold or given away by them. Such register shall contain the date of the sale or gift, the name and age of the person to whom the weapon is sold or given, the price of the said weapon, and the purpose for which it is purchased or obtained. The said register shall be in the following form. [Form of Register] Said register is to be kept open for inspection of the public. . . .¹²⁵

(NY: Oxford University Press, 2023), 206 (the one state with no gunpowder regulation to be found was Arizona); Saul Cornell and Nathan DeDino, “A Well Regulated Right: The Early American Origins of Gun Control,” Fordham Law Review 73(2004): 510; Adam Winkler, Gunfight (NY: W.W. ¹²⁵ Merritt Starr & Russell H. Curtis, Annotated Statutes of the State of Illinois in Force (1885), Criminal Code Ch. 38, para. 90.

65. With minor variations, this law was typical of such requirements. For example, a 1911 Colorado law offered this detailed set of instructions:

Every individual, firm or corporation engaged . . . in the- retail sale, rental or exchange of firearms, pistols or revolvers, shall keep a record of each pistol or revolver sold, rented or exchanged at retail. Said record shall be made at the time of the transaction in a book kept for that purpose and shall include the name of the person to whom the pistol or revolver is sold or rented, or with whom exchanged; his age, occupation, residence, and, if residing in a city, the street and number therein where he resides; the make, calibre and finish of said pistol, or revolver, together with its number and serial letter, if any; the date of the sale, rental or exchange of said revolver; and the name of the employee or other person making such sale, rental or exchange. Said record-book shall be open at all times to the inspection of any duly authorized police officer.¹²⁶

66. A 1911 New York law required every person selling any handgun to maintain a register “at the time of sale, the date of sale, name, age, occupation and residence of every purchaser of such a pistol, revolver or other firearm, together with the calibre, make, model, manufacturer’s number or other mark of identification on such pistol, revolver or other firearm.”¹²⁷ The purchaser also had to produce a permit at the time of the transaction, with the seller to note the permit information. Regulations being placed on the sellers of weapons are a historic normality.

G. Licensing Pertaining to Named Groups

67. The licensing of “Named Groups” referenced in Exhibit D includes the granting of weapons licenses to non-state residents, non-citizens, minors, felons, the intoxicated (who stood to lose their licenses), and Native Americans/Indigenous people. Licensing the sale of weapons to Native Americans might seem paradoxical, since white leaders fought protracted conflicts with Natives from the 1600s through the end of the nineteenth century. But whites also traded arms with Natives throughout this entire period, as they sought profitability, access to highly desired goods made available by Indians, and security alliances with some Indians through the supplying of weapons. This steady and enduring trade revealed “the high degree of interdependence between Indians and Euro-Americans.”¹²⁸ At least seven states imposed nine licensing laws pertaining to Indigenous people.

68. As for licensing related to enslaved persons and free persons of color (listed as “Pre-Civil War Blacks” in Exhibit D), it is well understood that white racist regimes before the Civil War were frantic to keep weapons out of the hands of enslaved persons, most specifically because “the South was perpetually terrified of slave revolts.”¹²⁹ The laws listed here, however, are all instances when enslaved persons or free persons of color were allowed to have possession of weapons under listed, restricted circumstances through licensing in the pre-Civil War era. Some whites who owned enslaved persons sought the convenience of allowing the enslaved to carry weapons for hunting or other purposes designated by, and often under the supervision of, the white owners.

69. Despite assertions that the only pre-twentieth century weapons licensing laws that existed in America pertained to African Americans and Indigenous people,¹³⁰ the data presented here demonstrate that, of the many weapons permitting laws enacted during this time, only a very small percent pertained to African Americans: of the 316 permitting laws listed in Exhibit D, 20 (6.3%) enacted in 13 states pertained to African Americans. The nine laws pertaining to Native Americans accounted for fewer than 3% of all licensing laws.

70. The fact that groups treated as marginalized in prior centuries—especially African Americans and Native Americans—were authorized to gain even limited access to dangerous weapons through licensing may seem incompatible with an otherwise racist tradition aimed at subjugating these groups, but such measures reflect the fact that it was in the interest of whites to allow weapons acquisition to these groups under limited circumstances.

H. Regulatory Taxes

71. Regulatory taxes on weapons, which are defined as “fees imposed by governments on specific activities or behaviors, primarily aimed at discouraging undesirable practices or encouraging compliance with regulations,” were enacted in at least nine states.¹³¹ In this category, individual weapons owners were assessed a money tax on various types of weapons they owned with the dual goals of raising revenue but also, in effect, monitoring and regulating the ownership or use of weapons. Failure to pay the tax could result in forfeiture of the weapons in question, or other penalties. For example, an 1867 Alabama law imposed a tax on “all pistols or revolvers in the possession of private persons not regular dealers holding them” of two dollars each, and a three dollar tax on all privately owned “bowie knives, or knives of the like description. . . .” Failure to pay the tax resulted in seizure of the weapons to then be “sold at

¹³¹ “Regulatory Taxes,” <https://library.fiveable.me/key-terms/ap-macro/regulatory-taxes>. Political scientist Theodore J. Lowi identifies regulatory taxes as a governmental technique of control designed not simply to raise revenue but to act as a regulatory mechanism to shape behavior. The End of the Republican Era (Norman, OK: University of Oklahoma Press, 1995), 46-47. For example, so-called “sin taxes”—taxes on products like cigarettes, alcohol, or gambling—are designed both to raise revenue but also to discourage or minimize the legal behavior being taxed. “Are Sin Taxes Healthy for State Budgets?” Pew Trusts, July 19, 2018, <https://www.pewtrusts.org/en/research-and-analysis/reports/2018/07/19/are-sin-taxes-healthy-for-state-budgets>. Regulatory taxes (also considered a type of excise tax) can also be understood as mechanisms “to offset the costs associated with regulating public safety.” “What are Excise Taxes and How Do They Affect the Federal Budget?” Peter G. Peterson Foundation, July 15, 2024, <https://www.pgpf.org/article/what-are-excise-taxes-and-how-do-they-affect-the-federal-budget/> public outcry before the court house door. . . .”¹³² An 1872 ordinance for the city of Galveston, Texas assessed a tax on the owner of any “pistol or rifle gallery.”¹³³ Note that this law is not listed in the category of the licensing of commercial shooting galleries in Exhibit E because in this instance the regulatory mechanism is the tax rather than a license. Failure to pay the tax would presumably result, sooner or later, in the closure of the establishment. To take a different example, a 1909 Delaware state law assessed a special “license fee” of ten dollars on non-state resident “gunners” that was an increase in the earlier fee. The fee was increased because “our neighboring States charge non-resident gunners a license fee of more than Five Dollars.”¹³⁴ While this law calls it a license fee, the purpose is to increase the financial burden on non-resident gunners, making it a regulatory tax.

IV. CONCLUSION

72. Gun purchase waiting periods are an artifact of the modern era, but with deep roots in American history and tradition. While the idea of waiting periods as a public policy tool was both beyond contemplation and beyond the reach of the immature and undeveloped American nation-state earlier in history, American society did respond to the intersection of weapons acquisition and problematic behavior similar to the modern policy remedy of waiting periods. And as Jacob Charles has persuasively noted, “the absence of positive law. . . . tells us nothing about what our ancestors thought their elected representatives could do.”¹³⁵ There is no reason to believe that the absence of firearm purchase waiting periods early in American history somehow means that our ancestors would have disapproved of such a policy option now. Far from it, especially considering the inherently modest nature of waiting periods.

73. The examples of old weapons laws pertaining to intoxication and weapons, and old licensing/permitting laws, provide remarkably similar analogs to modern waiting period laws.

74. For historic guns and intoxication laws, “sobering up” might be thought of as the historic equivalent of the modern waiting period “cooling off” period. Intoxication laws and licensing laws both utilized the passage of time.

75. Historic weapons licensing laws contemplated an evaluation process to improve the likelihood that individuals who sought access to firearms did not obtain that access until they were approved to receive a license. No licensing law examined here imposed a time limit for the issuance of a license, and many of these laws gave the license issuer discretion to withdraw said license if, in the judgment of the issuer, the recipient failed to abide by the terms under which the license was issued.

76. When our ancestors in the colonial, post-colonial, and developmental periods of the seventeenth, eighteen, and nineteenth centuries encountered social, behavioral, and other problems with respect to firearms, they responded with public policy techniques appropriate to their time, place, and circumstances. The examples pertaining to alcohol consumption and weapons licensing are all appropriate examples that are analogous to modern waiting period laws.

It shall be the duty of all ministerial officers, consisting of the justices of the peace, notaries public and other conservators of the peace of this state, to report to the prosecuting attorney of the county the names of all persons guilty of violating this section, and any person willfully failing so to do, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not exceeding two hundred dollars, and shall, moreover, be liable to removal from office for such willful failure; and it shall likewise be the duty of every person having knowledge of the violation of this act, to report the same to the prosecuting attorney, and to freely and fully give evidence concerning the same, and any one failing so to do, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars; provided, further, that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prohibit sheriffs, their regularly appointed deputies, who actually collect taxes in each county, and all constables in their respective counties and districts, and all regularly appointed police officers of their respective cities, towns or villages, all jailors and game protectors who have been duly appointed as such, and members of the department of public safety of this state, from carrying such weapons as they are now authorized by law to carry, who shall have given bond in the penalty of not less than three thousand five hundred dollars, conditioned for the faithful performance of their respective duties, which said officers shall be liable upon their said official bond, for the damages done by the unlawful or careless use of any such weapon or weapons, whether such bond is so conditioned or not. It shall be unlawful for any person armed with a pistol, gun, or other dangerous or deadly weapon, whether licensed to carry same or not, to carry, expose, brandish, or use, such weapon in a way or manner to cause, or threaten, a breach of the peace. Any person violating this provision of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction, shall be fined not less than fifty nor more than three hundred dollars or imprisoned in the county jail not less than thirty nor more than ninety days, or be punished by both fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court. Any circuit court granting any such license to carry any of the weapons mentioned in this act, the governor, or the superintendent of the department of public safety, with the consent of the governor, may, for any cause deemed sufficient by said court, or by the governor or by the superintendent of the department of public safety with the approval of the governor aforesaid, as the case may be, revoke any such license to carry a pistol or other weapon mentioned in this act for which a license is required, and immediate notice of such revocation shall be given such licensee in person, by registered mail or in the same manner as provided by law for the service of other notices, and no person whose license has been so revoked shall be re-licensed within one year thereafter; provided, that the authority so revoking such license may, after a hearing, sooner reinstate such licensee.
